The nutrition facts provide crucial information about serving size, calories, fat content, protein, and other essential nutrients. Typically sold in individually wrapped portions, Frigo Cheese Heads are popular among those seeking a quick, protein-rich snack. The standard serving size for these snacks is one cheese stick or wedge, which generally ranges from 28 to 30 grams. The nutrition label details the caloric and nutrient content per serving, helping consumers track their dietary intake accurately.

Serving Size and Caloric Content

The average serving size of Frigo Cheese Heads is approximately one ounce (28 grams), containing about 80 to 100 calories per serving. This calorie count makes it a relatively low-calorie snack option, especially when compared to many processed snack foods. The calorie content primarily comes from fat and protein, the two dominant macronutrients in cheese.

Ingredient Composition

Frigo Cheese Heads consist mainly of natural cheese varieties such as mozzarella, cheddar, or Colby Jack. Ingredients typically include cultured pasteurized milk, salt, enzymes, and natural flavors without artificial additives or preservatives. This simple ingredient profile contributes to the product's clean-label appeal and supports its nutritional claims.

Macronutrient Breakdown of Frigo Cheese Heads

Analyzing the macronutrient profile of Frigo Cheese Heads is essential for understanding its role in a balanced diet. The snack is rich in protein and fat, with minimal carbohydrates, making it suitable for low-carb and ketogenic dietary patterns.

Protein Content

Each serving of Frigo Cheese Heads contains approximately 6 to 7 grams of protein. This high protein content supports muscle maintenance, repair, and overall satiety, making it an ideal snack for active individuals and those seeking to increase their protein intake without excess calories.

Fat Content and Types

Frigo Cheese Heads generally contain 6 to 8 grams of total fat per serving, including saturated fat. The fat content provides essential fatty acids and contributes to the rich flavor and texture of the cheese. Saturated fat levels typically range from 3.5 to 5 grams per serving, which is important to monitor for those managing cardiovascular health.

Carbohydrates and Sugars

The carbohydrate content in Frigo Cheese Heads is minimal, often less than 1 gram per serving. Sugars are naturally present in trace amounts due to lactose found in milk, with no added sugars included in the product. This low carbohydrate profile makes the snack compatible with various low-carb diets.

Vitamins and Minerals in Frigo Cheese Heads

Beyond macronutrients, Frigo Cheese Heads provide several essential vitamins and minerals that contribute to overall health. Cheese is a natural source of calcium, phosphorus, vitamin A, and vitamin B12, among others.

Calcium and Bone Health

Calcium content in one serving of Frigo Cheese Heads ranges from 15% to 20% of the recommended daily intake. Calcium is vital for maintaining strong bones and teeth, supporting muscle function, and facilitating nerve transmission. Including this snack in the diet can help meet daily calcium requirements effectively.

Other Key Minerals

In addition to calcium, Frigo Cheese Heads provide phosphorus, which works synergistically with calcium to promote bone strength. Sodium content is notable, typically around 200 to 250 milligrams per serving, due to the natural salt used in cheese-making. Consumers should consider this when managing sodium intake.

Vitamins

Frigo Cheese Heads supply vitamin A, essential for vision and immune function, and vitamin B12, critical for red blood cell formation and neurological health. These vitamins enhance the nutritional value of the cheese snack beyond its macronutrient content.

Incorporating Frigo Cheese Heads into a balanced diet offers multiple health benefits due to their nutrient density and convenient portion size.
