Understanding Health Steal and Health Steal Up Mechanics

Health steal is a mechanic in SWGOH where a character recovers health based on a percentage of damage dealt to an opponent. This effect increases survivability by converting offensive actions into healing opportunities. Health steal up, on the other hand, is a positive status effect that enhances the amount of health a character recovers when they perform health steal abilities. This buff can be crucial in prolonged battles, allowing characters to sustain themselves through continuous damage absorption and recovery cycles.

How Health Steal Works

When a character attacks and deals damage, a portion of that damage is converted into healing, restoring the attacker's health. The amount healed depends on the character's base health steal percentage and any active health steal up buffs. This mechanic is particularly effective against teams that rely on sustained damage, as it reduces the impact of incoming attacks by offsetting damage with healing.

The Role of Health Steal Up Buffs

Health steal up buffs amplify the healing effect derived from health steal abilities. These buffs can be applied through abilities, leader skills, or other sources within the game. When active, health steal up significantly increases the amount of health recovered, enabling characters to maintain higher health pools and making them harder to eliminate. Understanding how to trigger and maintain health steal up is key to maximizing a character's healing potential.
